been unfurled and recognised only over the last few decades as a result of the tremendous progress made in the field of genetics, molecular biology, which included the discovery of endonuclease limitation, polymerase chain reaction and completion of the human genome project, etc.1.4 The range of biotechnology/Biotechnology, as explained above, has the latest roots in the science of molecular biology, genetic engineering and microbiology. Progress in these areas has been exploited in various ways both for the production of industrially important bio-chemicals, including enzymes and pharmaceutically important proteins, hormones, etc. and for basic studies in molecular biology. Due to its infinite potential, the scope and prospects of biotechnology have expanded dramatically for commercial exploitation. By integrating biotechnology into the process and product development on a commercial scale, biotechnology industries have grown enormously around the world, including India, creating new jobs, human resources development and poverty alleviation. Biotechnology has now become to support the economies of different nationalities, including both developed and developing countries.
